MEMORANDUM OPINION & ORDER

Pending before the Court is Defendant's Motion for Compassionate Release (Dkt. #1346). The Court, having considered the motion, the response, the record, and the applicable law, finds that the motion must be DENIED.

I. BACKGROUND

On October 19, 2012, a jury found Defendant Oscar Orlando Barrera Pineda ("Pineda") guilty of Manufacturing and Distributing Five Kilograms or More of Cocaine Intending and Knowing that the Cocaine Will Be Unlawfully Imported into the United States, in violation of 21 U.S.C. § 959 and 21 U.S.C. § 960(b)(1). The charges stemmed from an international investigation targeting a drug trafficking organization operating out of Colombia. Authorities identified Pineda as a pilot and aviation mechanic whose skills were used in planning and coordinating flights transporting cocaine out of Colombia. When arrested on December 8, 2008, Pineda was seated in the pilot's seat of a running aircraft located on a runway in Colombia. The aircraft contained 670 kilograms of cocaine. Authorities extradited Pineda to the United States.

On February 18, 2014 the Court sentenced Pineda to 292 months' imprisonment. The Court later reduced Pineda's sentence to 235 months following a retroactive change to the sentencing guidelines. Pineda is serving his sentence at CI North Lake. See <https://www.bop.gov/inmateloc/> (Register Number: 18940-078). The Bureau of Prisons ("BOP") projects that he will be released on October 16, 2026. Id. As a citizen of Colombia, Pineda is subject to deportation upon release.

Pineda seeks compassionate release based on his chronic migraines and risk of contracting COVID-19, arguing these constitute “extraordinary and compelling reasons” to grant a sentence reduction (Dkt. #1346). The Government opposes the sentence reduction, arguing Pineda has not demonstrated “extraordinary and compelling reasons” and a sentence reduction is unwarranted based on the § 3553(a) factors (Dkt. #1350).

II. LEGAL STANDARD

A judgment of conviction imposing a sentence of imprisonment “constitutes a final judgment and may not be modified by a district court except in limited circumstances.” Dillon v. United States, 560 U.S. 817, 824 (2010) (quoting 18 U.S.C. § 3582(b)); see also 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c). One such circumstance arises from 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(1)(A), the statute authorizing compassionate release. Under § 3582(c)(1)(A), a district court may grant a sentence reduction if it finds: (1) a defendant “fully exhausted all administrative rights”; (2) “extraordinary and compelling reasons warrant such a reduction”; (3) “such a reduction is consistent with applicable policy statements issued by the Sentencing Commission”; and (4) such a reduction is appropriate “after considering the factors set forth in § 3553(a) to the extent that they are applicable.” 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(1)(A).

The First Step Act of 2018 made the first major changes to compassionate release since its authorization in 1984. Pub. L. 115-391, 132 Stat. 5194. Procedurally, the First Step Act removed the Director of the BOP as the sole arbiter of compassionate release. Instead, the law enabled a defendant to move for compassionate release directly in district court after exhausting their administrative rights. 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(1)(A). Prior to this change, the BOP retained sole gatekeeping authority over compassionate release petitions. United States v. Brooker, 976 F.3d 228, 232 (2d Cir. 2020). This resulted in underuse and mismanagement.¹ Id. Through the First Step Act, Congress sought to mitigate this by “increasing the use and transparency of compassionate release” Pub. L. 115-391, 132 Stat. 5194, 5239 (capitalization omitted).

Substantively, the First Step Act also modified the “extraordinary and compelling reasons” determination. Congress never defined what constitutes “extraordinary and compelling,” but rather delegated this determination to the Sentencing Commission.² By the text of § 3582(c)(1)(A), any sentence reduction must be “consistent with applicable policy statements issued by the Sentencing Commission.” However, since passage of the First Step Act, the Sentencing Commission has not updated its guidelines on compassionate release.³ This has created significant disagreement across the country whether the pre-First Step Act policy statement is still “applicable,” and thus binding on district courts.

The Fifth Circuit recently joined the Second, Fourth, Sixth, Seventh, and Tenth Circuits in concluding that the Sentencing Commission’s policy statement, § 1B1.13, is no longer binding on a district court. See United States v. Shkambi, 2021 WL 1291609, at *4 (5th Cir. 2021) (“The district court on remand is bound only by § 3582(c)(1)(A)(i) and, as always, the sentencing factors in § 3553(a). In reaching this conclusion, we align with every circuit court to have addressed the issue.”). Under this new framework, § 1B1.13 still binds district courts on motions made by the BOP, but, for motions made directly by an inmate, district courts are free to consider any relevant fact in determining if “extraordinary and compelling reasons” exist. See Brooker, 976 F.3d at 235–36 (because the First Step Act allows both inmates and the BOP to file compassionate-release motions under § 3582(c)(1)(A), § 1B1.13 now applies only when such motions are made by the BOP and is inapplicable when a compassionate-release motion is made by a defendant); United States v. McCoy, 981 F.3d 271, 282 (4th Cir. 2020) (“A sentence reduction brought about by motion of a defendant, rather than the BOP, is not a reduction ‘under this policy statement.’”); United States v. Gunn, 980 F.3d 1178, 1180 (7th Cir. 2020) (agreeing with Brooker and holding that there is no “applicable” policy statement for § 3582(c)(1)(A) motions after the First Step Act); United States v. Jones, 980 F.3d 1098, 1109 (6th Cir. 2020) (“Until the Sentencing Commission updates § 1B1.13 to reflect the First Step Act, district courts have full discretion in the interim to determine whether an ‘extraordinary and compelling’ reason justifies compassionate release”).

² In 28 U.S.C. § 994(a)(2), Congress granted the Commission broad authority to promulgate “general policy statements regarding application of the guidelines or any other aspect of sentencing or sentence implementation that in the view of the Commission would further the purposes set forth in [18 U.S.C. § 3553(a)(2)].” And in 28 U.S.C. § 994(i), “Congress instructed the Commission to ‘describe what should be considered extraordinary and compelling reasons for sentence reduction, including the criteria to be applied and a list of specific examples.’” United States v. Garcia, 655 F.3d 426, 435 (5th Cir. 2011) (quoting 28 U.S.C. § 994(i)).

Despite this newfound discretion, district courts are not without guidance in determining whether “extraordinary and compelling reasons” exist. First, Congress has explicitly limited that “[r]ehabilitation of the defendant alone shall not be considered an extraordinary and compelling reason. 28 U.S.C. § 994(t) (emphasis added). Second, the Sentencing Commission’s policy statement and commentary is still persuasive. United States v. Logan, No. 97-CR-0099(3), 2021 WL 1221481 (D. Minn., Apr. 1, 2021) (finding that § 1B1.13’s definition of “extraordinary and compelling” should be afforded “substantial deference . . . as such deference is consistent with the intent (even if not mandated by the letter) of § 3582(c)(1)(A)”). Application Note 1 of the policy statement provides that “extraordinary and compelling reasons” exist when: (1) a terminal illness or other medical condition “substantially diminishes the ability of the defendant to provide self-care within the environment of a correctional facility”; (2) a defendant, who is at least 65 years old, “is experiencing a serious deterioration in physical or mental health because of the aging process” and “has served at least 10 years or 75 percent of his or her term of imprisonment”; and (3) a defendant has minor children without a caregiver or with an incapacitated spouse or partner who needs the defendant to be the caregiver. U.S.S.G. § 1B1.13, n.1(A)-(C). Lastly, BOP Program Statement 5050.50 (“PS 5050.50”), amended after passage of the First Step Act, describes the factors BOP considers grounds for compassionate release. See PS 5050.50 ¶¶ 3–6. These grounds are similar to the reasons identified by the Sentencing Commission, but also include a list of factors like rehabilitation and circumstances of the offense.⁴ Id.

Building from this guidance, district courts across the country have identified additional situations where “extraordinary and compelling reasons” exist. First, while rehabilitation alone is not an “extraordinary and compelling” reason for a sentence reduction, it can be a significant factor warranting a sentence reduction when an inmate has an otherwise qualifying condition.⁵ See United States v. Rodriguez, 451 F.Supp.3d 392, 405 (E.D. Pa. 2020) (noting that the Sentencing Commission itself interpreted § 3582(c)(1)(A) as allowing consideration of an inmate’s rehabilitation). If an inmate demonstrates a long, comprehensive record of rehabilitation, it goes to whether injustice would result if they remain incarcerated. See Brooker, 976 F.3d at 238 (identifying “the injustice of [a] lengthy sentence” as a factor that may weigh in favor of a sentence reduction). Second, courts consider any changes in law and the sentencing guidelines when determining if a sentence is extraordinary. For example, courts grant compassionate release at a remarkable rate for inmates subject to the now-abolished § 924(c) sentence-stacking. See McCoy, 981 F.3d at 285 (“As the court observed in Bryant, multiple district courts have concluded that the severity of a § 924(c) sentence, combined with the enormous disparity between that sentence and the sentence a defendant would receive today, can constitute an ‘extraordinary and compelling’ reason for relief under § 3582(c)(1)(A)”). Though Congress did not retroactively eliminate § 924(c) sentence-stacking, courts consider whether the outdated policy warrants relief on a case-by-case basis.⁶

⁴ PS 5050.50’s nonexclusive factors are: “the defendant’s criminal and personal history, nature of his offense, disciplinary infractions, length of sentence and amount of time served, current age and age at the time of offense and sentencing, release plans, and ‘[w]hether release would minimize the severity of the offense.’” United States v. Saldana, 807 F. App’x 816, 819 (10th Cir. 2020) (quoting PS 5050.50 ¶ 7).

Even if extraordinary and compelling reasons exist, they must outweigh the 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a) factors to warrant sentence reduction. See 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(1)(A). These factors are:

- (1) the nature and circumstances of the offense and the history and characteristics of the defendant;
- (2) the need for the sentence imposed—
 - (A) to reflect the seriousness of the offense, to promote respect for the law, and to provide just punishment for the offense;
 - (B) to afford adequate deterrence to criminal conduct;
 - (C) to protect the public from further crimes of the defendant; and
 - (D) to provide the defendant with needed educational or vocational training, medical care, or other correctional treatment in the most effective manner;
- (3) the kinds of sentences available;
- (4) the kinds of sentence and sentencing range [provided for in the U.S.S.G.] . . .
- (5) any pertinent [Sentencing Commission] policy statement . . .

(6) the need to avoid unwarranted sentence disparities among defendants with similar records who have been found guilty of similar conduct; and

(7) the need to provide restitution to any victims of the offense.

Id. § 3553(a).

III.DISCUSSION

Pineda moves for compassionate release based on his chronic migraines. Pineda argues his medical condition, coupled with the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic, warrants a sentence reduction. The Government argues Pineda's condition is not severe enough to qualify for compassionate release.

Although Pineda has met § 3582(c)(1)(A)'s exhaustion requirement, he has not met the statute's requirement that "extraordinary and compelling reasons" exist warranting a reduction of his sentence. Pineda's motion, therefore, must be denied.

A. Pineda Has Met § 3582(c)(1)(A)'s Exhaustion Requirement.

Pineda's compassionate release motion may only be considered if he first meets § 3582(c)(1)(A)'s exhaustion requirement. Courts may not consider a modification to a defendant's sentence under § 3582(c)(1)(A)(i) unless a motion for such a modification is properly made by the Director of the BOP or by a defendant who has fully exhausted their administrative remedies. 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(1)(A). Fully exhausting administrative remedies requires a denial by the warden of a defendant's facility or waiting thirty days without receiving a response to a request.⁷ Id.

Section 3582(c)(1)(A)'s exhaustion requirement is not waivable. See United States v.

Rivas, 833 F. App'x 556, 558 (5th Cir. 2020) (“Because the statutory language is mandatory—that a prisoner must exhaust their BOP remedy before filing in district court—we must enforce this procedural rule . . .”); United States v. Reeves, No. 18-00294, 2020 WL 1816496, at *2 (W.D. La. Apr. 9, 2020) (“While the Court is well aware of the effects the Covid-19 pandemic . . . § 3582(c)(1)(A) does not provide this Court with the equitable authority to excuse Reeves' failure to exhaust his administrative remedies or to waive the 30-day waiting period.”). If a defendant has not sought relief from the BOP, or has not waited thirty days since seeking relief, the Court may not consider their motion.

On January 22, 2021, Pineda asked the warden at CI North Lake to grant him compassionate release (Dkt. #1346, Exhibit 1). More than thirty days have passed since this request. Pineda has, therefore, met § 3582(c)(1)(A)'s exhaustion requirement.

B. Pineda Has Not Met § 3582(c)(1)(A)'s Requirement that “Extraordinary and Compelling Reasons” Warrant a Sentence Reduction.

Pineda's compassionate release motion turns on his assertion that the risk to his health associated with COVID-19—coupled with his chronic migraines—constitute extraordinary and compelling reasons to reduce his sentence. Pineda's assertion fails because his condition is not severe enough to constitute “extraordinary and compelling reasons” under § 3582(c)(1)(A)(i).

The Court has discretion to decide whether Pineda's conditions present “extraordinary and compelling reasons” warranting a sentence reduction. See Shkambi, 2021 WL 1291609, at *4. The Court is not bound by the Sentencing Commission's policy statement and may consider any relevant facts in evaluating Pineda's condition of incarceration. Id. Typically, courts consider whether a defendant suffers from a serious health condition, has a record of rehabilitation, the nature and circumstances of defendant's offense, and whether a sentence is based on outdated law. See Brooker, 976 F.3d at 238.

Rehabilitation alone cannot support a claim for sentence reduction, but may be considered as a factor in evaluating “extraordinary and compelling reasons.” See Brooker, 976 F.3d at 237-38; United States v. Hudec, No. 4:91-1-1, 2020 WL 4925675, at *5 (S.D. Tex. Aug. 20, 2020). Here, Pineda has successfully completed several BOP adult education courses and programs during his incarceration. These courses include anger management, anxiety management, men’s health, substance abuse, stress management, and personal finance (Dkt. #1346 at p. 13). Further, while Pineda played a key lead role as a pilot in the drug trafficking conspiracy he was charged under, he has served more than 67 percent of his sentence (Dkt. #1350 at p. 2). Accordingly, the Court finds Pineda’s rehabilitative record supports his release.

When considering whether a defendant’s health condition supports compassionate release, the mere existence of COVID-19 in society cannot independently justify a sentence reduction. See United States v. Miller, No. 2:17-CR-015-D, 2020 WL 2514887, *2 (N.D. Tex. May 15, 2020) (citing United States v. Raia, 954 F.3d 594, 597 (3d Cir. 2020)). To be granted compassionate release based on COVID-19, a defendant must have a serious comorbidity and evidence the facility is not effectively controlling the spread of the virus. See United States v. Vasquez, No. CR 2:18-1282-S-1, 2020 WL 3000709, at *3 (S.D. Tex. June 2, 2020) (“General concerns about the spread of COVID-19 or the mere fear of contracting an illness in prison are insufficient grounds to establish the extraordinary and compelling reasons necessary to reduce a sentence.”).

In the instant case, despite COVID-19, Pineda fails to show any health conditions that warrant compassionate release. Pineda is not subject to a terminal illness. Pineda’s conditions do not substantially diminish his ability to provide self-care in prison. Pineda’s health classification at CI North Lake is Care Level 1 “Healthy or Simple Chronic Care.” Care Level 1 inmates are less than 70 years of age and are generally healthy. They may have limited medical needs that can be easily managed by clinician evaluations every 6–12 months. See BOP, Care Level Classification for Medical and Mental Health Conditions or Disabilities, https://www.bop.gov/resources/pdfs/care_level_classification_guide.pdf (May 2019). Pineda has not indicated he has any physical restrictions, aside from those related to the management of his chronic migraines. Further, chronic migraines are not a severe enough comorbidity with COVID-19 to warrant compassionate release. United States v. McKeel, No. 1:16-CR-88-LG-JCG-1, 2020 WL 5083863, *3 (S.D. Miss. Aug. 26, 2020) (“The CDC does not indicate that migraine headaches are a condition which may heighten risk of severe illness from COVID-19.”). His age of 43 also does not support compassionate release.

Absent COVID-19, Pineda would present no basis for compassionate release because his medical ailment is appropriately managed and does not impede his ability to provide self-care in the institution. According to the BOP, CI North Lake also reports zero active COVID-19 cases among inmates. Federal Bureau of Prisons, COVID-19 Cases, <https://www.bop.gov/coronavirus/>. Though the alleged social distancing restrictions at CI North Lake are disturbing, Pineda fails to present evidence demonstrating a serious risk to his health warranting compassionate release. Records also show that Pineda’s facility is set to begin COVID-19 vaccinations on April 24, 2021.

Weighing the evidence, Pineda’s rehabilitative efforts are impressive, but he fails to prove that his incarceration is “extraordinary and compelling” under the § 3582(c)(1)(A)(i) framework. See United States v. Stowe, No. CR H-11-803(2), 2019 WL 4673725, at *2 (S.D. Tex. Sept. 25, 2019) (citation omitted) (stating that the defendant generally “has the burden to show circumstances meeting the test for compassionate release”).⁸

Under the rule of finality, federal courts may not “modify a term of imprisonment once it has been imposed” unless one of a few “narrow exceptions” applies. Freeman v. United States, 564 U.S. 522, 526 (2011) (citing 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)) (plurality op.); see also Dillon, 560 U.S. at 819 (same). Compassionate release is one of those exceptions, but a defendant must conform both to the procedural and substantive requirements of § 3582(c)(1)(A) for a court to modify a sentence. Because Pineda has failed to meet the controlling requirements for compassionate release set forth in § 3582(c)(1)(A)(i), his motion must be denied.⁹

IV. CONCLUSION

It is therefore ORDERED that Defendant’s Motion for Compassionate Release (Dkt. #1346) is DENIED.

SIGNED this 30th day of April, 2021.
